GOLDMINE

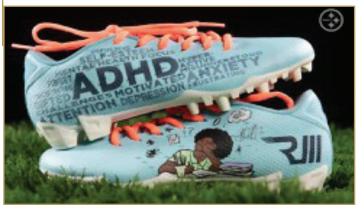

• McCloud credits his work ethic, not only to his family who taught him responsibility and discipline, but also to New England Patriots WR Nelson Agholor. Although almost four years apart, Agholor and McCloud grew up together in Tampa where they took their friendship from youth football to the NFL. The veteran receiver served as a mentor to McCloud. "We stay in contact all the time about life decisions. I've always stayed close with him in that way. He's got a great family. His dad and mom raised him well, but to have another player in this league to always make sure you're doing things the right way is important." "When he got drafted I was so excited," Agholor said. "The one thing I know about him is he's a player. He's going to find a way to make plays in this league. He just has to make sure he doesn't worry about where he was drafted. He just has to know his worth and that somebody needs him."

McCLOUD'S GOLDEN NUGGET

McCloud list his father, Raymond Jr., as his biggest inspiration. The elder McCloud played football at the University of Arkansas.

GOLDMINE

 McCloud recently launched his own charitable organization, the RMIII foundation, which is focused on raising awareness for ADHD and helping kids and families with how to handle the very common learning challenge. The cause is a personal one based on his own journey with ADHD. He was diagnosed in the third grade and struggled to overcome many obstacles, yet still graduated with honors. McCloud chose to bring light to the topic through the NFL's My Cause My Cleats initiative during Week 14 of the 2021 season. "It was really challenging in school wanting to get good grades and trying really hard while having to fight my own lack of focus and attention," said McCloud. "It was an internal battle of self-control. Before I was diagnosed, I felt pretty bad getting blamed for not being a good student or being labeled a bad kid when nobody understood that sometimes I had to work twice as hard on a simple task while other times the schoolwork came easy but sitting still did not. Additionally, I would often fall asleep in class, get in trouble and still get good grades, which would frustrate some teachers. I turned my focus to sports to balance my hyper-activity," said McCloud. "Luckily, I had great support from my family. It wasn't until college that I was also diagnosed with a sleep disorder. After getting help, I didn't feel alone, and my parents helped me to work through it and were very understanding. They always had high expectations for my grades and never made excuses. They still drove me to succeed, but they did it with support and patience and for that I am forever grateful." The foundation was established in 2021 and is partnering with other ADHD non-profits to bring families together to provide knowledge of ADHD and available resources, to improve self-esteem for kids and to work on improving the future for kids who suffer from ADHD and their families. McCloud plans to hold atheltic camps for ADHD youth as a way to channel their energy, somthing that helped him get to where he is today.
